“ Enid and I were instant friends back when we met in 1968. I was the new receptionist at a small print advertising firm and she was the print traffic manager. We moved in together in Redondo Beach (she would lay in the sun for hours). We drank together, too much, too often, but survived long enough to quit booze. She was a great homemaker, loving all the holidays and celebrations. I was not. But we made it work. Years apart without being in touch made no difference; when we would get in touch, time folded. I miss her not being in this plane anymore, but I believe spirits survive to meet again. Keep 'em smilin', Enid.
