“Gilbert was my best friend, I met him in the 7th grade at Orville Wright Jr. High School. He was a loan wolf, an I was a lone pup. We grew up only a mile apart, but as the old saying goes, the other side of the tracks. Gilbert taught this lil milk toast white boy from Westchester how to stand up, how to fight, how to not take life for granted. To this day, I'm the only one who ever dropped him. I was so proud an so scared at that moment... Gil popped up, looked me in the eyes an said, you did good Mike, you have learned to fight, you learned what I taught you. From now on I won't go easy on you. I can't tell you how many times he put me on the ground as I strived for that moment again. We spent years together, so many stories to share. Good an loving, memories like that. He was an always will be my best friend an mentor.

He was there by my side when my 34 yr old wife passed giving birth to my 2nd son. He was the only man that could talk me off the ledge, I was ready to checkout. He saved my llve....

Gil was there for me.

He was there by my side 7 yrs later when God above blessed me with a woman that loved me as much as I dld her. Gilbert jumped thru hoops to be at our wedding. At the reception all we talked about was our sons, Michael n Zachary. No matter how much shit life had thrown at us, we did great. We both had young son's to pass along our wisdom too.

We grew apart over the last several years, but we always managed to stay in. We talked a month or so ago, an he was making his way thru life. His joy as was mine was sharing how proud we are of our sons.

Zachary and Michael have something in common, They aren't even aware of... They are both loved by complete strangers.

God bless you Gil, I will see you again in our Lords Kingdom.
