“Jervey Lee was a friend from the time we shared the experience of being good old McFarland boys as teenagers. A small community where you could tell your friends from far away, just by the way they walked. We would eventually marry sisters and enjoy a lifelong relationship as brothers-in-law. We ran around together, fished together, and hunted with hounds together sharing many great adventures in the mountains such as Greenhorn, and Breckenridge Mountains.

Jervey was a good man, that is all that needs saying about that. His word was good, and he was more than anything else, a good Christian man who loved the Lord, and his wife Janet, and of course his family. My wife and I helped he and Janet celebrate, their fiftieth wedding anniversary by taking them to dinner at a nice restaurant. Jervey loved Janet from the time he laid eyes on her as a teenager, he was by his own admission twitterpated with her immediately. They married while they were still teenagers and are now in heaven together for all eternity.

Goodbye old friend, I will miss you.
